I firmly believe that the DOJ should put the Microsoft litigation behind us. Microsoft has continually produced an excellent product with each new release better than its previous software and generally at lower prices. Microsoft has done this while incurring substantial costs associated with litigation and settlements. As a user I have never been forced to use Microsoft software, I have always had available to me a multiplicity of software to choose from and have selected support software based upon capability and support.

I implore DOJ to let Microsoft get on with its primary business. From a user's point of view they have never been a monopoly as alternatives were always available to me, Microsoft was just a cause which the Janet Reno DOJ used to keep people from asking why some other more pertinent issues were not being investigated.

Sincerely - Dr. L. Kreuter
